Utilize all your favorite search engines right from your browser, save your time and effort and find the exact image you want faster! Add any image URL or use an already hosted image and get the source of the image in few seconds! How it works You can use the extension for any other search engine you use or have already set up as a default search engine. If you want to enter an image URL, you can enter the URL of an image you are interested in, or drag the image into the window. Then, you can choose any search engine from the list and start searching! The extension shows the results of the search in a panel on the right side of the window. The preview of the image is shown next to the list of results, so it is very easy to use. If you want to use the extension to search for the image's source, simply drag the image or image URL into the window and click Find Image. The results will be shown in a panel on the right side of the window, where you can click the preview of the image, and the source of the image will be shown on the right side. You can use the drop-down list on the left side of the window to change the search engine. Changelog Version 0.8 Version 0.7 Improved search engine configuration. Added support for URL of image. Image Search Assistant (LifeTime) Activation Code [Mac/Win]

----------------------------- Image Search Assistant is an extension for Firefox that enables you to track down any image found online. From this one point, the extension has two ways of functioning: the quick search context menu function and the add-ons UI, accessible from the extension bar. You might be familiar with online image search engines. Searching them for images is a quick and easy way of locating the picture you need and its source. Image Search Assistant is a free Firefox extension that enables you to execute such a search without having to switch between search engines. You can either use the extension's context menu function to search for images found online or by using the extension's window interface, accessible from the extension bar. The way of navigating to the pages is universal, so the extension is friendly with no matter what you're using - a PC, a tablet or mobile phone. No matter where you find your image, it will most likely be hosted on a website. Image Search Assistant, however, allows you to check where that website is hosted and what its name is. Thanks to that information, you can visit the site, have a look around, and even read the site's description. Furthermore, you can check out the image's description, find out what it's used for, and even compare it with other images from the same website. In the event that your image is not hosted on one of the search engines mentioned earlier, it's possible that the image is located on your hard drive. With the extension's context menu, you can instantly check that out. This way, you don't have to open the browser's address bar and type in the website's name. Just click once on the icon and an empty tab will be opened, where you can select the image's location. Image Search Assistant also provides a feature that enables you to view all the images located on your hard drive. This is done by opening the extension's interface and choosing the view tab. By default, the extension lists the files in a descending order of their modification dates. This feature allows you to quickly view and compare images, based on their modification dates. Image Search Assistant also gives you the ability to exclude sites from your image searches. This is done through the extension's settings pane. From here, you can add additional sites or remove already existing ones. Adding sites is not complicated. On the other hand, removing them is slightly more difficult, but not impossible.  What's New ------------ 1.6
