All you have to do write or paste Zawgyi words or phrases in the zuzu window and click a button to instantly convert it. By default, the app automatically copies the converted Unicode text to the clipboard, so you can paste it into any program with text support. The autocopy option can be disabled from the settings panel, though. Unfortunately, it doesn't have a feature implemented for copying text from any program (for example, using a global keyboard shortcut), in order to skip the part where you have to write it yourself in its window. Similarly, it cannot automatically paste text in other apps. Easy-to-use Unicode converter Nevertheless, zuzu has only been just recently released so there's plenty of room for improvements in future updates. Without any surprise, it ran smoothly on the latest Windows version in our testing and had minimal impact on system resources consumption. All in all, zuzu offers a simple and straightforward solution for formatting Myanmar Zawgyi (Burmese) text with Unicode. Too bad that it doesn't offer support for other languages as well. In conventional audio systems, a digital signal processing system provides a high fidelity sound reproduction or CD quality sound reproduction. A DVD playback or CD+G playback audio system, however, can only provide a standard audio quality signal and does not meet the audio quality expectations of today's consumers. For example, most portable hand-held CD+G player audio systems provide weak sound outputs and cannot play more than a

Shortcodes can be used not only on blog posts, but also to display things like youtube videos, facebook videos, dates and basic content. The thing is, when using shortcodes the image is displayed no matter what size the post is on every post. Example: I'm on a page with category as 'short videos' and shortcode is used. If I upload a video on that category page, it's displayed no matter what size the post. I've tried to put the code inside an in every post, but it still displayed it. I've also tried to put the code in the shortcode: [youtube height=300 width=400] How do I make it so
